The Decrease

Washington, D. C., Sept. 27-While the total number, 81,720, of deaths the series of census annual reports from tuberculosis in 1909 was greater was instituted, and the rate for 1909 than for any preceding year and exceeded by 3,431 the number, 78,289, compiled for 1908, the death rate, in the Census Bureau's death registration states and cities, showed a decline from 173.9 in 1908 to 167.5 per as that of England and Wales. The 100,000 estimated population in 1909, as reported in the forthcoming Census Bureau bulletin on mortality statistics prepared by Dr. Cressy L. Canver showed a much greater proportional increase in the number of deaths than tuberculosis, rising from 33,465 for 1908 to 37,562 for 1909. The death rate increased from 74.3 to 77, the latter being the highest crude death rate from cancer thus far recorded for the registration area of the United States.

It should be remembered, the bulletin points out, that cancer is one of the diseases having a peculiar age distribution for which the study of crude death rates is apt to be especially misleading, and until a careful analysis can be made of the data, with reference to the population details available after the compilation of the census of the present year, it will be wise to His Neck By Falling From limit inferences to the fact that the number of deaths so reported and the crude rate from this cause show a constant tendency to increase from year to year.
